Two issues have been added to the Triennial Review since the initial round of public workshops, including revising criteria for bacteriological quality from fecal coliforms to E. coli (freshwater) and enterococci (marine waters) and reclassifying a number of estuarine waters around the state from Class III to Class II

(shellfish harvesting or propagation) waters. The Department also plans to present additional revisions to Chapter 62-303, F.A.C., including 1) revisions designed to implement the proposed changes to the bacteria criteria, 2) revisions to clarify the scope of waters on the Study List and clarify what studies will be conducted for listed waters, 3) revisions to more clearly address minimum data and delisting requirements for the assessment of nutrient impairments, and 4) a wide variety of non-substantive clarifications and clean-up. Issues discussed at the first public workshops for Chapter 62-302, F.A.C., are still under consideration and include: 1) replacing the freshwater un-ionized ammonia criterion with total ammonia criteria, 2) revising the criteria for alkalinity to account for waters with naturally low alkalinity, 3) establishing new water quality criteria for carbaryl, chlorpyrifos, diazinon, and nonylphenol, and 4) updating a number of references used in Chapter 62-302, F.A.C.
